Exclusive Analysis: Role of Young Voters in April 26 Primaries

Record Youth Participation Continues in 2016; Young People Favor the Party Frontrunners to a Lesser Degree than Older Voters

Medford/Somerville, MA – Driven by participation in yesterday’s Democratic primaries, record youth participation continues in 2016, according to youth vote experts from the Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning & Engagement (CIRCLE) – the preeminent, non-partisan research center on youth engagement at Tufts University’s Jonathan M. Tisch College of Civic Life.

Youth participation increased over previous years in yesterday’s Connecticut and Maryland Democratic primaries, as well as in the Maryland Republican primary. Young people, however, continue to favor the party frontrunners to a lesser degree than older voters.

Young people in Connecticut increased their estimated proportion of all voters from 10% in 2008 to 12% of all voters in 2016. This increase was driven by youth Democratic primary participation, and young people preferred Senator Bernie Sanders over Secretary Hillary Clinton 83% to 17% in Connecticut.

In Maryland, youth participation increased in both party primaries, fueling an overall estimated increase in youth turnout in the state to 18% of young citizens, up from 15% in 2008. The estimated number of young people who participated in the Republican primary more than doubled the estimate for 2012 and bested the previous record from 2000. Young Republicans in Maryland split their votes across the three candidates almost equally: Donald Trump received 33%, while Senator Ted Cruz garnered 32%, and Governor John Kasich received 31%. On the Democratic side, Senator Sanders received 68% of youth support, which was the only age group he won in the state. Young African-Americans have shown more support for Secretary Clinton than youth from other groups so far this year, which could partially explain why she drew more youth support in Maryland than in Connecticut. African Americans made up almost half of all voters (46%) in Maryland’s Democratic primary.

We estimate that over 350,000 youth in Pennsylvania participated in yesterday’s primaries, accounting for 11% of all voters. Though the number of votes cast by young people in the Democratic primary dropped from 2008, the overall participation was strong with 18% of all eligible youth participating. Young people in Pennsylvania strongly preferred Senator Sanders in the Democratic primary, though Secretary Clinton won the state overall. With 52% of the vote, the Pennsylvania Republican primary saw the highest youth support for Donald Trump of any state so far in 2016, though that rate of support was still lower than for older voters in Pennsylvania.

“Young people remain engaged in the state primary contests, and we have seen record youth participation numbers repeatedly during this election cycle,” says Kei Kawashima-Ginsberg, director of CIRCLE. “This interest is driven by the relative competitiveness of the presidential nominating contests, as well as media and campaign attention. It remains to be seen how this enthusiasm will translate to the general election, but youth participation in voting and civic life at an early age is promising for the strength of democratic participation in the future.”

Throughout this election season, CIRCLE’s 2016 Election Center will continue to offer new data products and analyses providing a comprehensive picture of the youth vote, both nationally and in targeted states and congressional districts across the country. CIRCLE researchers also will provide insight into key states where young people have the potential to shape the 2016 general election, as rated in CIRCLE’s Youth Electoral Significance Index.
